Confession of Failure.

Johnnie was practicing diligently with his new slingshot. Suddenly an old lady touched him on the arm. "Boy," she said, almost tearfully, "that's a thing I never could do—but a harmless little bird."

Johnnie sighed.

"Darned if I can, either!" he said, sympathetically.

BOSCHEE'S SYRUP

Why use ordinary cough remedies when Boschee's Syrup has been used so successfully for fifty-one years in all parts of the United States for coughs, bronchitis, colds settled in the throat, especially lung troubles? It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning, gives nature a chance to soothe the inflamed parts, throw off the disease, helping the patient to regain his health. Made in America and sold for more than half a century.—Adv.

GREAT AWAKENING IN SIGHT

Time Coming When Hubby Would Discover That His Wife Was Not Altogether Spiritual.

He watched her daintily nibbling her cross sandwich.

"I know what it is," he cried, suddenly. "I know why you appear to me more than any other girl I ever met. It's because you're the perfect combination of the spiritual and physical. Your fresh, plump beauty and your luscious appetite."

"I never did eat much, even as a child," she murmured, indignantly. "A touch of toast in the morning, a sip of soup at noon, a sprig of celery or a pinch of parsley at supper and I'm satisfied. As mother always says, the man who pays my board bill will be in luck."

"My ideal!" he cried.

Late that night she retired to her chamber, and consumed seven hard-boiled eggs, four cold pork chops, half a pound of potato salad, three tomatoes and three slices of pie.

"It's a fearful strain!" she thought, "but I'll land him this week or die in the attempt!"

Suited Papa, All Right.

The man in the next flat was pounding on the wall.

"Look here," he cried, "I can't sleep with your kid yelling like that! If you don't make him stop, I will!"

"Come in, sir—come in!" said the kid's father. "You'll be as welcome as the flowers in spring!"

Probably Not.

COULDN'T EAT PET

Children Balked at Idea of Making Meal of "Jerry."

Outspoken Revolt at Dinner Table Resulted in Neighbors Having Poetic Revenge and Enjoying Dainty Dish of Roast Pig.

A well-known physician in town has a family of small children who are crazy about animals, and every stray dog or cat is always sure of a good home if they happen to wander near the doctor's spacious residence. Indeed, the doctor calls his home the "Zoo Annex," for it harbors not only dogs and cats galore, but three canaries, two white mice, five pigeons, one conversational and profane parrot and a brown squirrel, so an animal or two more doesn't count.

Someday gave the children a baby pig, a nice little pink-and-white pig with funny little squinty eyes and a cute little curl to its tail.

The children were wild with joy over their new pet, and installed it in the laundry, but evidently the little pig didn't adapt himself to his surroundings, and persisted in staying up late nights and giving voice to such lugubrious lamentations that the doctor christened him "Jeremiah." This name was too long for the children to manage, so they called him Jerry and loved him to death.

Jerry grew so fat he could hardly waddle, but he was great fun and frolicked with the youngsters and had a grand time, and even his squeal had a joyous note in it by day, but once night fell Jerry seemed to grow so low in his mind that he refused to be comforted, and his tones were as shrill and piercing as a banshee's.

He grew so big that he looked like a young mountain lion in the arms of the children, and occasionally he would escape to the front of the house and waddling up the steps, would lie down and drop into slumber, so that visiting patients had to fall over or step over the reclining Jerry. Then to add to the general discomfort his squeals grew deeper like unto the vocal efforts of a basso profundo, so the doctor, losing all patience, declared that Jerry must pass on and pass out.

So one day when his children were in school Jerry took his first automobile ride, ending up at the butcher's, who had orders to return Jerry right side up with care, ready for the oven and the Sunday dinner.

The children, in ignorance of this feat, searched high and low for the missing pig, but he couldn't be found, and after weeping violently for the first day, grew resigned to their loss, after the manner of children, and seemed to forget him.

Sunday came and the family assembled at the dinner table. North, the cook, came in, bearing aloft the plump form of Jerry roasted to a turn, with his tail turned in a saucy ringlet and an apple in his mouth.

There was a moment of absolute silence, fraught with significance for the doctor and his wife, then one of their angelic youngsters shrieked: "It's our Jerry," and set up a dismal howl which the rest soon joined and fixing their guilty parents with uncompromising looks, demanded to know why their beloved pig was being served up as a burnt offering.

They were silent and abashed by North, the cook, who, wiping a furtive tear from her eye with the corner of her apron, muttered: "Shure, 'tis meself thinks it a sin to murder the baste."

Not one mouthful of the martyred Jerry would any of the mourning youngsters take, and the parents suddenly lost all desire for roast pig and decided that the late Charles Lamb's dissertation of that delicacy was all wrong.

Jerry, the barked, was removed without delay and sent to a neighbor, who took a poetic revenge in eating the animal that had squealed them into insomnia for weeks past.—Buffalo Courier.

A Delayed Funeral.

George I. King, known by every man, woman and child in Brown county, and by all visitors who go to Nashville by way of Hohenburg, has been the stage coach driver between Nashville and Hohenburg and the horse driver for Nashville's only undertaking establishment for ten years.

Recently there was to be a burial at the Story cemetery, twelve miles south of Nashville, and King was called on to drive the horse. He hitched two horses to the horse and started from Nashville at 5 a. m. After he had driven within two miles of the cemetery, he got out to walk up a steep hill and noticed that he had forgotten to put the coffin in the horse. He turned the horses' heads toward Nashville and made the trip back in short time. He loaded the coffin and changed horses and resumed the trip. The burial was delayed four hours.—Indianapolis News.

Identifying Him.

"Title Lazzerberry came to town with me yesterday, but I lost him in the shuffle somers," said the gnat from Jimson Junction. "If you happen to run onto him tell him I'm looking for him."

"But I do not know him," replied the acquaintance addressed. "How shall I identify him?"

"If you see a white-eyed fellow at Twelfth and Grand or some other lively corner, running out into the street to get across and then running back again, and starting and stopping and jumping sideways and hopping around like a toad on a hot griddle, that's Lazze.—Kansas City Star.

Birds Not Man's Enemies.

It is a fact that if it were not for the bird life we would starve to death. The great natural enemy of man is any force that will destroy his food stuffs. Every field is the home of thousands of insects, and agriculture reports will verify the fact that each year millions of dollars' worth of crops are destroyed by insects. And the birds are the natural enemies of the insect pest.

I have also given this medicine as a spring tonic; for such 'Golden Medical Discovery' has no equal."

Worse Than That, and Then Some.

Sympathetic Red Cross workers crowded around Sgt. George Siskind of the Thirtieth Infantry, who lives in Chicago, when he limped off the Manchuria on its arrival at New York.

NEW ERA DAWNS FOR WORLD

With the Conquest of the Air, Life Has Changed From the Old Scheme of Things.

Do the people of today realize the great changes which now are working over the scheme of the universe? We should look well on the old order before it has faded away. We stand on the edge of the new epoch in the history of mankind. In the air we have just conquered a new element of inconceivable immensity. With the pulsing of victory in every land we have a slightly overwhelming sense of our power.

Almost in a moment the span of the world has shrunk to a quarter of its former size. Where we thought in countries now we think in continents. Where we thought in days now we think in hours, observes a writer in London Daily Mail.

We have the power of throwing a globe round the earth. Remote Australia suddenly draws close. Greenland and Spitzbergen loom over us. Rome and Constantinople and Amsterdam are quiet foreign suburbs of London.

Nation almost merges into nation. Perhaps the desire of ages may by a glorious fraction draw nearer and the splendor of a world peace and a peaceful world may materialize a little through the air.

Now should we take our fill of the old scheme of things. In twenty years' time our life today will seem 10,000 years old. The ancient civilizations of Rome and Egypt will not be more legendary. How lucky are we, who are young, to be able to see this swift and dazzling age of the air move triumphantly into being.

No longer is Japan an unattainable dream. The Nile lies but a day and a half away. On glorious homecomings we can slip away into the star-bowered darkness of the East to drift at dawn above some fragrant island of Greece.

Over the rolling whiteness of the limitless cloudland, under a limitless sky of unimagined depths, we will wing our long and easy way through a hush-inspiring and to the golden sand-dusted beaches of the southern seas.

This new life will not spoil our lovely world. Less than the train or the whirling car will our journeys disturb the earth. On the blue above our white wings will glitter, for a moment—a little murmuring as of bees will sink to the ground below and we shall be gone. The world, unstained and pure, goes on rejoicing into the era of the air.

India's Coal Supplies.

Mr. H. Kellogg Bunker, former superintendent of rolling stock, East Indian railway, speaking at the Society of Arts, said that the coal resources of India were estimated at 70,000,000 tons—ten times as great as those of Japan. Europe's coal deposits were estimated at 784,000,000 tons. Of the numerous coal fields of proved value in India only 18 were being worked, the reason being found in the remote position of the coal fields from ports and existing centers of industry. Sir Charles H. Arundel, chairman of the Great Indian Peninsula railway, who presided, said that a very large amount of coal would be produced in India if labor were more plentiful. It was largely due to those who had worked the heavy traffic on the Indian railways that the empire was victorious in Mesopotamia.

Paris Under Fire.

After the first day and a half of the long distance bombardment of Paris an officer of the Red Cross went out to get his lunch. Paris had just traversed one disquieting moment—a moment of mystery. Ordered to his cellars in broad daylight, it could not, in spite of periodic explosions, discern a single "god" in the sky or hear a single French defensive shot. But the news of the long-range gun was now abroad; already the boulevards were in movement, and the old woman who sells newspapers at the kiosks opposite the Madeleine was in her place.

"Good morning, madame. I haven't heard that famous gun of yours for at least half an hour—have you?"

"What would you? It has to have its lunch!"

Sharpe in A Flat.

"Germany's place in the peace conference? Hies she any place?" Senator Lodge wanted to know. "Is she so much out of tune with the scheme of things as Miss Matchmaker?"

"Mrs. Matchmaker was greeting Mr. Bach and as she reached for his coat, Miss Matchmaker, in the next room, could be heard howling a song to her own accompaniment."

"Ah," exclaimed Mrs. Matchmaker, "my daughter is breaking into song."

"You are right, madam," growled Mr. Bach. "You can tell that she's breaking in, for obviously she hasn't been able to find the key."

The Russian a Child.

When there is a temptation to think of the Russian as subtle or complex, when there is danger of being outwitted by the bright clothes of his modernity, his governments, his music, his painting—all his great struggle to express himself—it will be well to remember that this is only the other side of his overpowering honesty and terrible naivete. All the other peoples in the world have become sophisticated. The Russian remains still a child, still hoping and believing, haunted by shadows and tears, and brave enough and simple enough always to confess them.—Ralph J. Black in New York Tribune.

The Quai d'Orsay where the peace delegates gathered, contains, with its symmetrical, gilded eagles, heavy square armchairs, arched marble tables, wonderful damasks, which have so often figured in former descriptions of brilliant assemblies since the early days of the third Napoleon. Some commissioners of these objects demand that the sumptuous carpet be covered or removed, in order to allow the plenipotentiaries of those boric countries to smoke cigarettes at their ease, even when absorbed by passionate debates.
